Next Generation Farmers! You are invited to attend an important conference that will be held August 5-7, 2014 in Ames, Iowa. The Conference, titled “Resilient Agriculture: Adapting to a Changing Climate,” will provide an opportunity to meet and talk with other farmers, scientists, and industry leaders to learn more and discuss:

- Latest science on weather and climate impacts on agriculture
- Adaptation strategies for corn/soybean-based systems
- Hands-on field demonstrations
- New emerging technologies for farm management

Conference sponsors are offering Next Generation Farmers scholarships, which will cover travel, meals, registration, and hotel.

To apply for a scholarship, please submit an application online which asks you: “What challenges do you see as a future farmer in responding to a changing climate?”

The scholarship committee will select 10-12 individuals to attend the conference. If you are not chosen as a scholarship recipient, you are still welcome to join the conference at your own expense. Registration is open at www.sustainablecorn.org.

Farmer input is critical to our discussion and we look forward to your participation in this important event!
